GREAT BRITAIN

Solicits the Good Offices of the United States Government

To Secure the Release of a British Subject Under Arrest in Venezuela.

In Diplomatic Circles This is Considered a Radical Departure From the Ultimatum Methods Hitherto Practiced by England on Republics.

Special to the DAILY LEADER.

WASHINGTON, June 25.—As soon as Secretary Olney returns to the state department, and he is confidently expected Thursday, he will receive from Sir Julian Pauncefote, the British ambassador, a request from the British government to use his good offices with Venezuela to secure the release from imprisonment of Crown Surveyor Harrison, who is reported to have been arrested by Venezuelan police while he was engaged in constructing a road connecting the Barima and Cuyuni rivers in the disputed territory. This action of Great Britain is considered in diplomatic circles a radical departure from the ultimatum methods hitherto practiced on American republics, and much significance is attached to this fact as probably indicating the considerable progress made toward an arbitration agreement and the practical acknowledgment of the United States is a party in interest in the Venezuelan disputes as well as in future controversies regarding territory on the American continent.

While it is universally admitted that the new incident is exceedingly unfortunate just at this juncture, there is great diversity of opinion in fixing the blame. Even the British government has the most indefinite knowledge of the exact locality where the arrest took place, although it is claimed that the surveying party had no authority to go outside of territory occupied exclusively by Englishmen for the past ten years. No official knowledge of the arrest has yet been received at the Venezuelan legation, where confidence is expressed that Venezuela will have sent a notice of the affair, perhaps for the information of the United States government, the moment the facts became known at Caracas. The Venezuelans, however, find considerable satisfaction in the information that Great Britain will appeal to Secretary Olney in the matter, as indicating that it is not considered of so serious a nature as at first apprehended. They place the whole blame for whatever has occurred on Mr. Joseph Chamberlain's colonial policy.
